

Unboxing diversity in advertising

By Leigh Andrews

23 Jul 2018

'Thinking outside the box' is a good way to improve your creativity skills. If you're a creative by profession, here's why Kantar Millward Brown says you need to see that bounding box as 'diversity', and how to go beyond it in your advertising.

Makhathini in action at Kantar Millward Brown's offices in the Foreshore.

On 18 July or 'Mandela Day' 2018 – the centenary of the birth of SA's most globally iconic former leaders – Kantar Millward Brown hosted a session titled 'Man vs machine and the quest for ROI' at their offices on the Cape Town foreshore, having rolled out similar sessions at the ACA Masterclasses and Apex Awards held earlier in the week.

The morning was specifically focused on what the rise of AI means for creativity, and while all the sessions were informative and relevant, the one with the most staying power by far, especially on Mandela Day, when all things 'diversity' are celebrated, was presented by Samu Makhathini.

She is associate account director at Kantar Millward Brown and a self-professed diversity advocate. As a result, she presented 30 minutes of 'rethinking your branding entirely' insights into the role of diversity in advertising.

Makhathini did so by unboxing how to truly commit to inclusion and harness the power of diversity to grow great brands.

Makhathini on stage at the ACA Apex Awards.

With the rising call for diversity and equality in the industry, there's a chance your brand feels it's already working towards being more diverse. There's also a chance you're completely missing the mark. Here's why...

Makhathini started off with an overview of the current #SkhotSoHard movement, and said that as an industry, we need to first decide if we are a bunch of 'skhotanes' or just rather custodians for our own brands.

'I have H&M clothes I'm going to burn'

Kyle Zeeman 10 Jan 2018

Confused? Skhotanes wear expensive, bright Italian name brand clothing – sometimes multiple layers of branded pants at once. It's a youth dance subculture that then burns those expensive clothes just to prove they can, and has been featured on Carte Blanche.

Makhathini said, "they eat Ultramel on random days, not just Sundays, and then go so far as to spill it while dancing, disregarding the cost thereof and showing there's more where that comes from."

“ when a skhothane is about to spill ultramel but there's a "Do Not Litter Here" sign . pic.twitter.com/A88HcnWYn— Nkulu (@Nkulu_KZ) May 24, 2017 ”

This is next-level conspicuous consumption and we do the same thing in advertising when our creative work is not diverse and instead shows “white is right” and that it’s a man’s world, both with lotions marketed to black women to help them “become lighter”, by using a can of Pepsi to place the #BlackLivesMatter movement and by literally giving females half the reward for the same effort.

Dear Ballito Pro: this is how NOT to handle a PR disaster

Shelley Finch 29 Jun 2018

Dove apologises for 'racist' whitewashing ad, social media won't accept

Jessica Tennant 9 Oct 2017

2017 in review: The public mistakes you smashed on social this year

Julia Breakey 20 Dec 2017

These blunders may have all been different in execution but they share an element of tone deafness, which Makhathini says happens if there's no one in your team to call you out before it reaches the public. And so, the less diverse your team, the more likely these expensive mistakes will keep being made.

The case for diversity in creative work

That's why diversity is good business, as racially diverse teams outperform the non-diverse by 35% and progressive ads are more effective, with research by Kantar Millward Brown and Unilever's analysis of 186 ads finding that the most progressive ads 25% more likely to be effective as they trigger more positive engagement. They're more engaging, enjoyable, relevant, different and surprising.

There's increasing focus on this from a legal perspective with a focus on BB-BEE, but diversity is not just about race, nor is it a tick box. The following quote from the Diversity in Media and Advertising (DIMA) Summit 2018 explains it best:

“ Taking every person from a place where they are most authentically themselves and allowing them to contribute to your organisation at their maximum level. ”

The next step then is to normalise diversity.

This means diversity is no longer the story, the people are. And that's where brands are often falling short.

#FairnessFirst: The end of the 'inclusion, equality and diversity' talk as we know it?

Leigh Andrews 7 May 2018

#FairnessFirst: "Diversity and inclusion are the future of creativity" - Susan Credle

Leigh Andrews 28 May 2018

Makhathini feels TV producer Shonda Rhimes, behind such hits as Grey's Anatomy and Scandal (we know it as The Fixer), is doing an excellent job of this in breaking stereotypes with the characters she creates and gets the globe to identify with. Rhimes says it best:

“ It isn't about tokenism or trotting out tired and offensive stereotypes; it's about giving characters from all backgrounds the opportunity to tell their story, without making it the story. ”

It's the Shondaland 'normal'.

“ Congrats @iamSandraOh! Thee first woman of Asian descent to be nominated for a Lead Actress Emmy” - <https://t.co/NdallBHby4>— Unstereotype Alliance (@un_stereotype) July 12, 2018 ”

TV is not real-life, but the times, they are a-changing.

#FairnessFirst: Addressing that gender equality pay gap, day by day

Leigh Andrews 16 Apr 2018

For one thing, these issues are now coming to light. At present, it's expected to take 217 years just to bridge the current gap between men and women, to reach true gender parity.

Asked why it's taking so long to bridge the gap and why we're not changing, Makhathini said, “I don't have the answers, if you can't tell.”

Our natural instinct is to go for self-preservation, but that just perpetuates the cycle of fear. Instead, Makhathini says, “Why don't we rather use that energy to preserve what the future looks like?”

No one is really free of blame in this regard as we all face unconscious bias, but keeping these practical steps in mind can help us move in the right direction and reach a point of true diversity:

- Immerse yourself in your market. It's not about going on a township tour but about watching the programmes where you place your ads. We say our target audience watches the show, but do they really? We also need to hear the conversations on Black Twitter. Even if no one is saying it directly to you, it is still being said.
- Throw away the recruitment scorecard and specific job specs and rather identify new talent pools. It's not just about race and gender, but also the diversity of thinking.

- Authentic workplaces allow people to be themselves. This is important when you remember Makhathini's point that the brand should be the story, not their race or gender. So don't test marketing messages with your friends and just those who will agree with you, rather test them with your consumers for a representative truth.
- Consumers are asking for it not to be contrived, so aim for authenticity where you can and make diversity the new normal in your organisation.

It's on all of us to raise an alert when something makes us uncomfortable and should not be taken as the norm, as Meghan Markle herself did at the age of 11 – and the brand listened:

#FairnessFirst: Why Meghan Markle's feminist sparkle means she won't be a 'push-over princess'

Leigh Andrews 5 Mar 2018

#FairnessFirst: All you need to know to #unstereotype advertising

Leigh Andrews 11 Jun 2018

That's why Makhathini concluded we should do it for our own role models – whether yours is Madiba himself, Markle or Beyoncé – and also do it for our children, as Herbert Hoover said it best:

“ Blessed are the young, for they shall inherit the national debt... ”

Read more

#Mandela100: 'We have no choice but to move forward' - Obama

18 Jul 2018

Beyond pink and blue: the quiet rise of gender-neutral toys

Jason Bainbridge 5 Jul 2018

Gender-inclusive marketing

IGI 13 Mar 2018

Fashion icon and career woman, Barbie turns 59

12 Mar 2018

Leigh Andrews AKA the #MilkshakeQueen, is former Editor-in-Chief: Marketing & Media at Bizcommunity.com, with a passion for issues of diversity, inclusion and equality, and of course, gourmet food and drinks! She can be reached on Twitter at @Leigh_Andrews.

■ #Loeries2020: Behavioural economics as creativity, but not as we know it... - 24 Nov 2020

■ #DI2020: Ignite your inner activist - representation through illustration - 27 Feb 2020

■ #DI2020: How Sho Madjozi brought traditional Tsonga xibelelani into 2020 - 27 Feb 2020

■ #DI2020: Silver jubilee shines with Department of Audacious Projects launch - 26 Feb 2020

■ #BehindtheSelfie with... Qingqile 'WingWing' Mdlulwa, COO at The Whole Idea - 26 Feb 2020

View my profile and articles...

For more, visit: <https://www.bizcommunity.com>