Held at The Empire, in the heart of Johannesburg, the awards ceremony hosted PR professionals to a memorable evening of glitz and glam seeing many walking away with awards that acknowledged their commitment and drive towards bettering the quality of public relations and reputation management campaigns that worked for brands in the year.

Making a notable entry this time round and scooping an award for Best Mid-sized Public Relations Consultancy was DNA Brand Architects, a consultancy that is fast gaining momentum in the industry for their out of the box thinking and making wow stuff happen for brands.

“We are very encouraged by this nod from industry peers who have been tasked with unearthing businesses with a different approach to reputation management. But most importantly, to continue to showcase that PR is an important value add for business,” says Sylvester Chauke, Chief Architect and founder of the organisation.

The organisation not only won in a category that celebrates them and their organisational culture but also bagged three other awards for their Steers client, namely: Best Launch of a New Product/Service, a Silver Award for Campaign of the Year and Best Up and coming PR professional to their young professional, Monare Matema.

DNA Brand Architects is a family of 35 young thinkers who are a mix of different cultures and experiences which they draw on to create great work for brands. They believe in a new dawn of young leaders who challenge the boardrooms by demonstrating what is possible when young minds take on boardrooms.

“It was encouraging seeing the calibre of entries and in many ways, we are inspired by what our profession can achieve and by the other fantastic agencies that did truly outstanding work. There is a lot more to be done and we will not stop until the job is done,” concludes Chauke.
