

Ananya Khaitan to speak on matters of import and impact

 By Jessica Tennant

24 Feb 2020

Communication designer Ananya Khaitan has been announced as one of the speakers at Design Indaba 2020.

Ananya Khaitan

The New Delhi-based designer specialises in book design and brand identity design, with his work reflecting his affinity for matters of import and impact.

The National Institute of Design graduate works at the intersection of law, policy and activism and frequently collaborates with think tanks, research universities and advocacy groups to make a meaningful difference in society and tackling sociopolitical issues such as capital punishment, child rape, drug addiction and poor data privacy.

He has designed books, crafted brand identities, tackled design writing, created public service announcements and even developed design guidelines at policy-level, when consulting for a committee headed by a Supreme Court Justice.

Some things feel surreal to be able to say. This is one of them: I'll be speaking at @designindaba later this month, on what happens to be its Silver Jubilee year. The Design Indaba stage is hallowed ground, since it's hosted pretty much every design hero of mine. This year is no different, and I'm thrilled(/nervous) to be a small part of the extraordinary lineup. Big thanks to @ravinaidooatlarge and @tinabreidi for making this happen. And to @mbierut, who kickstarted this whole thing. S T O K E D.

In this moment, I'm talking about Tughlaq's visionary but disastrous coins, and what happens when thoughtful design is absent. I then go on to take a completely unprompted dig at the stupid and disastrous currency change of 2016, because why not. Spoke at @tedxnitksurathkal . Met some lovely people :)
