NEWSWATCH: For the first time since the horrific rally accident that partially severed his forearm, Polish driver Robert Kubica tested a Formula One car this week.

Kubica completed a full day's testing with Renault - in a 2012 Lotus E20 car - at the Ricardo Tormo track in Valencia, Spain.

Throughout the day, Renault posted teasing tweets suggesting that Kubica might be getting back behind the wheel:

“ It's true. It really is Robert #Kubica. Back in one of our cars after six years. pic.twitter.com/Kd76KUw7H7— Renault Sport F1 (@RenaultSportF1) 6 June 2017 ”

According to reports, Renault hasn't commented on whether he's returning to action but, inevitably, his secretive test drive has prompted speculation that he might be seeking a full-time return to the sport.
